Wings for Life

The not-for-profit and state recognized research foundation, Wings for Life has set itself the goal of finding a cure for spinal cord injury.

Since 2004, with the help of donations from individuals and companies, Wings for Life has been funding promising research projects and clinical studies to heal the injured spinal cord.

There is justified hope for healing traumatic spinal cord injury. For science is unanimous: injured nerve cells in the spinal cord are capable of regeneration. Even though a cure is not yet possible, steady progress is being made, giving affected people hope for an improvement in the quality of life and the prospect of recovery.

Wings for Life has funded 259 research projects to increase the chances that the diagnosis of "spinal cord injury" will be a thing of the past.
